

Interactions within the Self

Courtesy of Sara Quinn

"If young people at a certain point are called upon to take an active part in the life of humanity, they must first feel that they have a great mission to accomplish and prepare themselves for it."

High school students need to be aware of and feel responsible for their unique attributes: their views, personalities, intellectual and emotional growth, and how they come to identify their interests and passions for learning. Providing authentic encounters with a variety of real work and life opportunities—integrated with formal study—makes them responsible decision makers in their eyes and those of their peers and adults.
